Regression toward the mean. That is, in any series of random events an extraordinary event is most likely to be followed, due purely to chance, by a more ordinary one.

~Leonard Mlodinow

One thing that feeds into the way you experience the social world is your mood - and one thing that affects your mood is the weather.

~Leonard Mlodinow

Subliminal is about how we misinterpret our behavior because we were unaware of what our unconscious minds are doing.

~Leonard Mlodinow

Listeners instinctively detect that when we lower the usual pitch of our voice, we are sad, and when we raise it, we are angry or fearful.

~Leonard Mlodinow

Nonverbal communication forms a social language that is in many ways richer and more fundamental than our words.

~Leonard Mlodinow

Social rejection doesn't just cause emotional pain; it affects our physical being.

~Leonard Mlodinow

A failure doesn't mean you are unworthy, nor does it preclude success on the next try.

~Leonard Mlodinow

Research suggests when it comes to understanding our feelings, we humans have an odd mix of low ability and high confidence.

~Leonard Mlodinow

That's why successful people in every field are almost universally members of a certain set - the set of people who don't give up.

~Leonard Mlodinow

We judge people and initiatives by their results, and we expect events to happen for good, understandable reason. But our clear visions of inevitability are often only illusions.
