I deserve passion," she said. "I deserve to be loved- in every way. I deserve a man who'll give his whole heart, not the part he isn't using at the moment.

~Loretta Chase

Prying into others' private affairs is the preferred occupation of small minds.

~Loretta Chase

The bigger they are, the harder they fall. And the better the world liked seeing them fall.

~Loretta Chase

Why must women stay quietly? Why must we be little moons, each of us stuck in our little orbit, revolving around a planet that is some man? Why can't we be other planets? Why must we be moons?

~Loretta Chase

Let me explain something to you, he said. If you want to get something out of a man, dashing out his brains against a lamppost isn't the way to do it.

~Loretta Chase

Jessica: "You great drunken jackass!" Dain: "I did not give you leave to use my Christian name.

~Loretta Chase

I can do one or the other. Lovemaking or thinking. But not both at the same time.

~Loretta Chase

Parents must be treated with respect, whether one wants to strangle them or not.

~Loretta Chase

Life is not an opera. Scenes belong on the stage.

~Loretta Chase

Silk and Shadows is something else. Like brilliant. It got under my skin as very, very few books have. It's still under my skin. Mikhal was haunting.

~Loretta Chase

Did you know you could kill a person with a hatpin?" she said. "I did not," he said. "Do you speak from experience? Have you murdered anybody? Not that I'd dream of criticizing.

~Loretta Chase

She longed to throw something at him. A chair. Herself.

~Loretta Chase

Women don't have a sense of humor. They don't need one. The Almighty made them as a permanent joke on men. From which one may logically deduce that the Almighty is a female.

~Loretta Chase

And so I beat him and beat him until he kissed me. And then I kept on beating him until he did it properly.

~Loretta Chase

You refuse to listen. Because, like every other man, you can keep only one idea in your head at a time-usully the wrong one.

~Loretta Chase

I am not in love with you," she said. "It is an infatuation. I have heard of such derangements happening to elderly spinsters.

~Loretta Chase

I should like to see you try.

~Loretta Chase

He was a man. Men always had lewd thoughts. It was perfectly natural and normal

~Loretta Chase

I'm no good at being good.

~Loretta Chase

They were perfectly suited. They would speak of books the livelong day and night and bore everyone else but themselves to distraction.

~Loretta Chase

"Miss you," he said. It was the barest murmur, scarcely a sound.

~Loretta Chase

We're of one mind, Grenville and I, and the mind is hers, on account of my being a man and not having one.

~Loretta Chase

Just because I squeezed my gigantic bottom into men's trousers, you needn't assume my brains have shrunk to masculine size.

~Loretta Chase

Masculine pride is an exceedingly precious and fragile thing

~Loretta Chase

I love these pet names," she said, gazing soulfully up into his eyes, "Nitwit. Sap skull. Termagant. How they make my heart flutter!

~Loretta Chase

You needn't consult me about redecorating. I know no female can live two days in a house and leave anything as it was. I shall be much astonished if I can find my way about when I return.

~Loretta Chase

I want you," she said. "I told you so," he said.

~Loretta Chase

We've been wed more than a month. Since it appears you mean to stay, I might as well give you leave to call me by my christian name. It is preferable, at any rate, to 'clodpole.
