I'm a reader who uses fiction as a way of worrying about life.

~Lorin Stein

I don't know what people should be reading. Only you know what you should be reading.

~Lorin Stein

The real threat to reading isn't the time we spend hanging out, it's the time we spend online.

~Lorin Stein

If you wrote about sex the way Jim [Salter] writes about sex in nonfiction, you would be a sociopath.

~Lorin Stein

I love having people around who are better interviewers than I am and who can make the time to do a really great job. All of the interviews that we've published are with people who really interest me.

~Lorin Stein

In general, short stories are less read than before, they're less published than before and, not surprisingly, they're less taught than before.

~Lorin Stein

For me the question that you have to ask, about any magazine, is whether it's needed, whether it's publishing things that no one else could publish, or publish equally well. So there's that.
