War is a most uneconomical, foolish, poor arrangement, a bloody enrichment of that soil which bears the sweet flower of peace.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

... too many young painters of the day work for the crowd, and not for art. But, then, should not the painters of the day work for the education of the crowd?

~M. E. W. Sherwood

... the English are very fond of being entertained, and ... they regard the French and the American people as destined by Heaven to amuse them.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

English people ... are very kind, very friendly, interested in a general way, and consider us a great, wonderful, unknown sort of Australia, and that is all.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

Holland is a land of intense paradox. It is quite impossible, but it is there.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

The poor are always ragged and dirty, in very picturesque clothes, and on their poor shoes lies the earth of the Lacustrine period. And yet what a privilege it is to be even a beggar in Rome!

~M. E. W. Sherwood

If you should put a knife into a French girl's learning it would explode and blow away like an omelette soufflee.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

To look at and properly appreciate the British Museum is the work of a lifetime.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

The American is said to become full-flavored, and in time a most all-round man, through the polish which Europe can impart.

~M. E. W. Sherwood

I did not find Liverpool ugly. Her stately public buildings, broad streets, public squares, and noble statues redeem her from the charge.
