People have two sides, and a person first becomes appealing when you discover both of those sides - and worlds work exactly the same way.

~Mamoru Hosoda

With the assumption that animation is a medium for children, I want to make movies that reaffirm the future, and let them know that this world is a world worth living in.

~Mamoru Hosoda

I think of movies as depicting moments of change. Change is growth, and that change also possesses the same dynamism that movies do.

~Mamoru Hosoda

I want to take themes that are shared throughout the world, express them through animation, and make movies from them.

~Mamoru Hosoda

Usually, people tend to see someone on the surface and think that that's who that person is.

~Mamoru Hosoda

I think the inner and outer aspects of the self together make one person.

~Mamoru Hosoda

The process of producing a project is one long string of delight and anxiety, but I think the real thrill of animation would have to be drawing the pictures.

~Mamoru Hosoda

It struck me that when we read picture books to children, we parents, and people as a whole, do not appear in them very much, and that they are more constructed to be a world of children and animals.
