You can send people letters, and show them photos, but they can never come to visit where you live. Unless you love them. And then they can burn it down.

~Michael Marshall Smith

You have to accept gifts occasionally, because there are some things you can't give yourself

~Michael Marshall Smith

Being truly aimless is like being dead. It may even be the same thing, or worse. It is the aimless who find the wrong roads, and drive down them, simply because they have nowhere else to go.

~Michael Marshall Smith

Hell is being alive, and being alive is all there is.

~Michael Marshall Smith

My limited experience of such things told me that you get closest to the truth by not giving it advance warning that you're coming after it.

~Michael Marshall Smith

Death is real. Death changes things. Everything else is filler, merely a message from our sponsor.

~Michael Marshall Smith

You haven't seen untidiness until you've seen a room where gravity has failed twice in different directions.

~Michael Marshall Smith

One of the most subtle and powerful writers of dark fiction - a unique voice.
