My hope for America and the activists is that they never, ever go back to sleep, and they keep fighting for social justice, equality, and decency.

~Nina Turner

I think the political class, just overall, has underestimated the suffering in America.

~Nina Turner

My role is to remind people that everyday people can make a difference. And if we get people out there doing things to make America a better place, we can bring change.

~Nina Turner

What happens to one directly happens to all indirectly.

~Nina Turner

We've had to overcome a lot in America to become a nation of progress. We still have a lot of progress to be made.

~Nina Turner

When you have mega-corporations that have record profits, but they don't want to share even a little bit of that with their workers, we are actually putting our communities at peril.

~Nina Turner

I stand for all people even if it causes me political heartburn - and I'm going to do that no matter what my future holds.

~Nina Turner

If a mother or a caregiver does not have a job that pays a living wage and they cannot afford child care, that is unacceptable.

~Nina Turner

Women should not need a permission slip from government to take care of their own reproductive health.

~Nina Turner

The better a work environment is, the better it is for the employer - not just the employee.

~Nina Turner

We are going to have to do some real soul searching as a country and try to bring America together, because it is divided.

~Nina Turner

In America, the 1 percent and the 10 percent are doing just fine, but the people who are bearing the brunt of this economy are the ones who suffer.

~Nina Turner

We need people to fight back. So many people are depressed, and they've become preoccupied with the negatives of this [Donald Trump] presidency. That can cripple people mentally.

~Nina Turner

When you win, you can afford to be gracious, you can afford to have a little more mercy.

~Nina Turner

A lot of people are suffering in America.

~Nina Turner

The Rust Belt has suffered a lot because of trade deals.

~Nina Turner

We cannot deny that people are suffering, and they are making that suffering known at the ballot box.
