Men cannot labor on always. They must have recreation.

~Orville Dewey

There is nothing to do with men [and women] but to love them; to contemplate their virtues with admiration, their faults with pity and forbearance, and their injuries with forgiveness.

~Orville Dewey

The taxes of government are heavy enough, but not so heavy as the taxes we lay upon ourselves.

~Orville Dewey

Our hearts must not only be broken with sorrow, but be broken from sin, to constitute repentance.

~Orville Dewey

Politeness is practical Christianity.

~Orville Dewey

God giveth true grace to but a chosen few, however many aspire to it.

~Orville Dewey

Occupied people are not unhappy people.

~Orville Dewey

The less we parade our misfortunes the more sympathy we command.

~Orville Dewey

Truth is the root of all the charities.

~Orville Dewey

Every relation to mankind, of hate or scorn or neglect, is full of vexation and torment.

~Orville Dewey

Godliness is practical religion.

~Orville Dewey

What is there glorious in the world, that is not the product of labor, either of the body or of the mind?

~Orville Dewey

Argument does not soften, but rather hardens, the obdurate heart.

~Orville Dewey

A man seems never to know what anything means till he has lost it; and this I suppose is the reason why losses--vanishing away of things--are among the teachings of this world of shadows.

~Orville Dewey

We may neglect the wrongs which we receive, but be careful to rectify those which we are the cause of to others.
