A modern health and social care system has to be completely focussed on the needs of its users.

~Patricia Hewitt

We just have to be crystal clear that if we were to abandon all the reforms made over some very painful years in the Labour party, we would be consigned back to opposition.

~Patricia Hewitt

And I hope very much that the ALP will become increasingly engaged in the international discussions that are taking place amongst centre-left parties generally.

~Patricia Hewitt

Certainly we know from our own experience how very difficult it is when you've lost an election that perhaps a lot of people were expecting you to win.

~Patricia Hewitt

As patients and consumers, we are better informed today about our health care than any previous generation.

~Patricia Hewitt

The accusation that we've lost our soul resonates with a very modern concern about authenticity.

~Patricia Hewitt

Business leaders must not cling to old ways of doing business, or allow inertia or complacency to prevent them from making the decisions that they will eventually be forced to make.

~Patricia Hewitt

And it seems to me in that experience may lie at least some of the clues for policy development perhaps constitutional changes as well that Labour will need to make at the national level too.

~Patricia Hewitt

Fifty per cent of the public doesn't know what 'fifty per cent' means.

~Patricia Hewitt

You've got to respond to that and of course thinking through the role of a left party in the modern world, in the modern economy and society and having a policy response to that.
