Oh, yeah. A big part of my job is drinking martinis when I work in advertising.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

Recently, I've been loving Monster Hunter! A film conversion is currently in planning.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

I had this movie, Death Race, that was a passion project for me that I'd had in development for almost ten years.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

There was a lot of pressure on me as a filmmaker to raise the bar and do better than before so, you know, I put a lot of thought and energy, that's for sure.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

I went for a more classical approach to filmmaking with lots of dolly, track and cranes, and slightly slower, more choreographed fight moves, so you get more fight moves in one take.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

If you work with any new technology, you have to expect that it's going to be a little problematic.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

When people see what real 3D looks like, they'll go, "Oh, that's why I spend an extra $5 a cinema ticket. That's worth it!"

~Paul W. S. Anderson

3D really altered the way I shot the movie completely, and it was exciting because, after 20 years of filmmaking, I felt like I was making my first movie, all over again.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

I think 3-D across the board both in a home format and cinema is, it's going to be very big.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

One of the reasons why Resident Evil is a very successful video game franchise, much more so than a lot of others that have fallen by the wayside, is that they have constantly evolved.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

I really believe in 3-D. I really think it is the wave of the future for cinema.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

I always run the stories by Capcom. They read the scripts and give their comments. I would never want to kill a character that they really want to use in the next game.

~Paul W. S. Anderson

Every time I go to Japan and meet Capcom it is like going to see the Umbrella Corporation. You ask them things and they won't give you a straight answer about anything.
