I think therapy is a rather misguided notion of capitalist societies whereby the self-indulgent examination of one's life supersedes the actual living of said life.

~Peter Cameron

I think that's what scares me: the randomness of everything. That the people who could be important to you might just pass you by. Or you pass them by.

~Peter Cameron

'Are you okay?' she asked me. 'Of course,' I said. 'Why wouldn't I be okay?' 'There are lots of reasons why you might not be okay.' 'There are lots of reasons why anyone might not be okay,' I said.

~Peter Cameron

'It wouldn't kill you to get me an iced coffee.' 'No, but not getting killed doing something is not a very compelling reason to do it.'

~Peter Cameron

I hate stand-up comics; I think funny is something you are, not something you desperately try to be in front of a roomful of obnoxious people.

~Peter Cameron

I thought the best thing to do would be nothing, and in that way things couldn't get any worse.

~Peter Cameron

Unfortunately I have never been good in math. Numbers simply do not interest me or seem as real to me as words.

~Peter Cameron

I found the idea of being a librarian very appealing--working in a place where people had to whisper and only speak when necessary. If only the world were like that!

~Peter Cameron

I only feel like myself when I am alone.

~Peter Cameron

Sometimes I envy religious people for the comfort of believing. It would make everything so much easier.

~Peter Cameron

She had all the best things wrong with herâ€”incest, insanity, drug addiction, bulimia, alopecia: you name it. All the perfect stuff for a memoir. She's so lucky.

~Peter Cameron

One man's nonsense is another man's sense.

~Peter Cameron

I knew my mother was right, but that didn't change the way I felt about things. People always think that if they can prove they're right, you'll change your mind.

~Peter Cameron

I felt this awful obligation to be charming or at least have something to say, and the pressure of having to be charming (or merely verbal) incapacitates me.

~Peter Cameron

You're so young... Are you sure that's what you want your life to be, forever and ever? That job? That career? That girlfriend?

~Peter Cameron

I don't think I could ever work in such a blatantly hierarchical corporate setting. I know that everyone in this world is not equal, but I can't bear environments that make this truth so obvious.
