Democracy is not simply a question of structures. It is a state of mind. It is an activity.

~Rory Stewart

The question shouldn't be what we ought to do, but what we can do.

~Rory Stewart

I had been walking one afternoon in Scotland and thought: Why don't I just keep going? There was, I said, a magic in leaving a line of footprints stretching across Asia.

~Rory Stewart

I have never met a villager who does not want a vote.

~Rory Stewart

This idea that failure is not an option: It makes failure invisible, inconceivable and inevitable.

~Rory Stewart

The world isn't one way or another. Things can be changed very, very rapidly by someone with sufficient confidence, sufficient knowledge and sufficient authority.

~Rory Stewart

Despite the dubious statistics, democracy is a thing of value for which we should be fighting.

~Rory Stewart

If democracy is to be rebuilt, it is necessary not just for the public to learn to trust their politicians, but for the politicians to learn to trust the public.

~Rory Stewart

Religions . . . seem to avoid mountain passes.

~Rory Stewart
