Some of my best friends are illusions. Been sustaining me for years.

~Sheila Ballantyne

The moon develops the imagination, as chemicals develop photographic images.

~Sheila Ballantyne

You can always trust information given you by people who are crazy; they have an access to truth not available through regular channels.

~Sheila Ballantyne

The trouble with going crazy is that you have to go around making it up to everyone afterwards. It seems they should be making something up to you.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Sundays are terrible because it is clear that there is no one in charge of the world. And this knowledge leave you drifting around, grappling with unfulfilled expectations and vague yearnings.

~Sheila Ballantyne

It's expectation that differentiates you from the dead.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Inner resources are like natural resources; they both dry up eventually when the demands on them are heavy.

~Sheila Ballantyne

If you have enough fantasies, you're ready, in the event that something happens.

~Sheila Ballantyne

The freeway is the last frontier. It is unsurpassed as a training ground for the sharpening of survival skills.

~Sheila Ballantyne

There is no irritant as painful as an ace up your sleeve that you can never use; it's the kind of thing that causes oysters to produce pearls.

~Sheila Ballantyne

I can't wait fifteen years to do my work: Because my ideas are coming now.

~Sheila Ballantyne

It's unbelievable the primitive feelings that are aroused by rapid change.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Californians are good at planning for the earthquake, while simultaneously denying it will happen.

~Sheila Ballantyne

You might not have thought it possible to give birth to others before one has given birth to oneself, but I assure you it is quite possible, it has been done; I offer myself in evidence as Exhibit A.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Life is like a great jazz riff. You sense the end the very moment you were wanting it to go on forever.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Ghetto humor is the social twin of fantasy; together they sustain the powerless, who accomplish miracles through illusion.

~Sheila Ballantyne

in California death is one of the most successfully kept secrets there is. If you doubt this, try to find a cemetery.

~Sheila Ballantyne

Illusions are crucial to the maintenance of life functions.
