So let me end with the wish that you find the same kind of happiness, and laughter, and love, that I have found, and that you have the wisdom to make them last.

~Sherwood Smith

One doesn't lose a self, like a pair of gloves or a pine. We learn and change, or we harden into stone.

~Sherwood Smith

Because you showed one face to all the rest of the world, and another to me.

~Sherwood Smith

They're safe," he said. "And you're not made of glass". He swept me up in his arms. I laughed. "And I'm not made of glass." He carried me into our room and kicked the door shut behind us.

~Sherwood Smith

The only noise now was the rain, pattering softly with the magnificent indifference of nature for the tangled passions of humans.

~Sherwood Smith

When in doubt, be ridiculous.

~Sherwood Smith

Except. What is normal at any given time? We change just as the seasons change, and each spring brings new growth. So nothing is ever quite the same.

~Sherwood Smith

When people first discover beauty, they tend to linger. Even if they don't at first recognize it for what it is.

~Sherwood Smith

Despite how entertaining certain stories were, at the bottom of every item of gossip there was someone getting hurt.

~Sherwood Smith

We'll abduct Garian. Or Jason." "Andâ€"?" "And dump them into the ocean. Nobody would ever pay a ransom for them.

~Sherwood Smith

Why did I laugh at his sorry, bedraggled appearance? Because ridiculousness made a repellant situation more bearable.

~Sherwood Smith

Everyone is an idiot," I stated. "Except me.

~Sherwood Smith

Finally someone takes me seriously enough to ask for my word of honor, and it's a villain.

~Sherwood Smith

Angry men with pointy things sent to secure a foreign city are pretty much alike anywhere. That's what I've heard. So far nothing's convinced me different.

~Sherwood Smith

Female authors were still using male names when I was young, or they were neatly shoehorned into womens books except for those few that men could always point at when the disparity was pointed out.
