I worry about technical details - did I mix the cello half a decibel too high? Things like that.

~Steven Price

I like taking my leads from what I see rather than trying to impose. I like that way of looking at things and seeing what's on screen and seeing how I can draw music out of it almost.

~Steven Price

A lot of the music editing job is communication and working out what a director really wants the music to be.

~Steven Price

In the mid-2000s, I kind of accidentally became a music editor.

~Steven Price

I like expansive stuff that has a lot of space in it, like some of the early Pink Floyd albums.

~Steven Price

I'm a guitarist by background. That's what I used to do for sessions when I was younger and that sort of thing. We have several pianos in the house and I tend to just sit and fiddle around.

~Steven Price

It's a funny thing with the inspiration thing. There's always loads of music around that I absolutely love and films going back to when I started making film music in the mid-80's.

~Steven Price

I tend to work in layers. There's a huge orchestra in the film, but I also record a lot things with very intimate groups, and I like to be able to use the textures of those intimate groups.

~Steven Price

For me, I work very self-contained. It's literally just me sitting in a room doing it until the very end of the process when other musicians come in and instruments are recorded.

~Steven Price

I think after everything in the whole process of filmmaking, temp scores are great if you use them for what they're good for, if you use them for that early stage of support for things.

~Steven Price

A lot of composers I know hate temp scores because people get attached to them.
