Liquor is the kiss of the angels as well as the curse of the devil. It can conceal but also can reveal

~Thrity Umrigar

Life happened. In all its banality, brutality, cruelty, unfairness. But also in its beauty, pleasures and delights. Life happened.

~Thrity Umrigar

Tomorrow. The word hangs in the air for a moment, both a promise and a threat. Then it floats away like a paper boat, taken from her by the water licking at her ankles.

~Thrity Umrigar

You felt a deep sorrow, the kind of melancholy you feel when you're in a beautiful place and the sun is going down

~Thrity Umrigar

So all I'm saying is, everything that seems important--our quarrels, or philosophical differences--in the end, it doesn't matter much. You know? In the end, what matters is what remains.

~Thrity Umrigar

The Forty Rules of Love is a wise, joyous page-turner... and one that speaks urgently to our war-ravaged times.

~Thrity Umrigar

Her hands were empty now, as empty as her heart, which itself was a coconut shell with its meat scooped out.
