Those who study the stars have God for a teacher.

~Tycho Brahe

The mouse is wise, but the cat is wiser.

~Tycho Brahe

May I not seem to have lived in vain.

~Tycho Brahe

An astronomer must be cosmopolitan, because ignorant statesmen cannot be expected to value their services

~Tycho Brahe

Now it is quite clear to me that there are no solid spheres in the heavens, and those that have been devised by the authors to save the appearances, exist only in the imagination.

~Tycho Brahe

And when statesman or others worry [the scientist] too much, then he should leave with his possessions.

~Tycho Brahe

So mathematical truth prefers simple words since the language of truth is itself simple.

~Tycho Brahe

Behold, directly overhead, a certain strange star was suddenly seen . . . Amazed, and as if astonished and stupified, I stood still

~Tycho Brahe

When I had satisfied myself that no star of that kind had ever shone before, I was led into such perplexity by the unbelievability of the thing that I began to doubt the faith of my own eyes.

~Tycho Brahe

There is something eccentric in the orbit of Mars.

~Tycho Brahe

It was not just the Church that resisted the heliocentrism of Copernicus.

~Tycho Brahe
