Feeling fear is a good sign that your survival instincts are intact. You need to appreciate the dangers to stay safe.

~Zoe Bell

Humans sort of instinctively respond negatively to something that's not true.

~Zoe Bell

In my career as a double, a lot of my job is to not just do the fights to make them look cool, but also to appear as the same person as the actor I am playing.

~Zoe Bell

I love acting. And if there's a niche that needs filling, I'm happy to get in there and try to fill it.

~Zoe Bell

My job has always been to not only make my character look like a badass but to also make the actor I am fighting opposite to be the character they need to be too.

~Zoe Bell

When my physicality is involved, it's kind of my comfort zone, so I find it much easier to access emotions.

~Zoe Bell

I would find it more difficult if somebody else was doing the action.

~Zoe Bell

I've always appreciated great acting performances, but I've even learned to appreciate not so great ones 'cause it's hard.

~Zoe Bell

The thing that I come across is that people think that I might actually be super aggressive, want-to-fight type in real life. The irony is that that's just not true, at all.

~Zoe Bell

I like the debate, but I don't really like the fight. I don't like being in the ring. I'm not competitive.

~Zoe Bell

I'm a poster child for feminism whether I like it or not, but I was resistant to the part of me that was a woman.

~Zoe Bell

My job as a double was always to put [actors] at ease. My job was to make my character, or the actress that I was doubling, look as badass as possible by being there.

~Zoe Bell

Whatever my job description consists of, becomes my job. Maybe it's just the way I tackle work, in general.

~Zoe Bell

I had to paint the picture that I was never scared, otherwise I couldn't do my job. But now, as an actor, I'm literally paid to look emotionally accessible.

~Zoe Bell

People are far more protective [of women] instinctively.
